

Ben Nolan

Associate

I am an associate in Fox Williams' technology team, advising on data protection and technology matters.

Ben primarily advises businesses on their data protection compliance obligations as set out under the GDPR and UK data protection law. As part of his role, Ben regularly advises on international data transfers, data processing agreements and data security (including advice on security incidents). Ben also has experience advising on IT and other technology transactions.

Ben joined Fox Williams in 2019 and has previously completed a secondment at a world “mega-event” organisation where he advised on data protection and other commercial matters.

Legal Expertise

- Data protection
- E-commerce and consumer protection
- Technology contracts

Experience

- Advised a leading international sporting association on the data protection issues and contractual framework in relation to an online portal made available to its members.
- Advised a technology start-up involved in providing innovative online services in the real estate sector on its privacy policy and website terms of use.
- Advised an online technology services provider on the data protection requirements in relation to a new SaaS solution being launched globally.

- Advised an AdTech company on the contractual requirements in relation to a new SaaS solution being offered by it.

Memberships

- Law Society of Scotland