

Dominique Logan

Associate

I am an associate in Fox Williams' financial services team, advising on regulatory matters including consumer credit, payments and e-money, banking and broader fintech.

Dominique advises on a variety of regulatory matters across the financial services industry, including consumer credit, payments and e-money, general banking products, licensing, and fintech. Dominique has experience advising a broad spectrum of clients in the financial services industry, including start-up fintechs, large retail and wholesale banks, buy-now-pay-later providers and large credit firms. Dominique's experience in both private practice and in-house gives her insight into the challenges financial services firms face in ensuring regulatory compliance alongside commercial success.

Dominique joined Fox Williams in April 2024. Prior to this, Dominique was legal counsel at the UK entity of an Australian technology company that services the pensions industry. Before her move to the UK from Australia, Dominique was an associate in the financial services regulatory team at the Melbourne office of Allens Linklaters, having trained and qualified as a solicitor at Herbert Smith Freehills.

Legal Expertise

- Consumer lending (credit cards, overdrafts, loans, mortgages)
- General financial services regulatory
- Buy-now-pay-later
- Banking
- Fintechs and technology
- Payments and e-money
- Cryptocurrency and blockchain

Experience

- Advising various fintechs on their entrance to both the Australian and UK markets, and associated regulatory and licensing requirements.

- Supporting a significant Australian buy-now-pay-later provider on a broad range of regulatory matters, both pre- and post-IPO.
- Advising a large Australian bank on the establishment of its digital banking capability.